

AND NOW THE CALL OF THE ROOF IS HEARD IN NEW YORK

Each year the claims of the metropolis as a summer resort grow more and more insistent. While thousands of New Yorkers consider a visit to seashore or mountains imperative an increasing number of thousands from all over the country heed the call of the city and look forward to a summer in New York. And each year more and more New Yorkers are making a stay in the city and a "round of the roofs" a part of their summer plans. This year the arrangements for the entertainment of the New York "resorter" are more elaborate than ever, as is shown by the above photograph of the opening of "the Cascades," atop the Biltmore Hotel. Maurice and Florence Walton are entertaining the diners.

Even golf need not be altogether abandoned by the roof enthusiast. The Breslin Hotel has recently fitted up a golf course on its roof. Between dances there is opportunity to keep one's driving arm and putting eye both in practice.
